THE PASSFIELD POLICY

The Labor government in Britain is by now, no doubt realizing that it had acted too precipitately in formulating its new Palestine policy. From accounts, most of the leading members of the cabinet had been too preoccupied with other pressing matters to devote much thought to the Palestine question. The Indian round table conference, the Imperial conference, and the preparations for the opening of parliament engaged the attention of the premier and most of his chief advisers. Accordingly they left the Palestine matter in the hands of Lord Passfield. The latter gentleman took advantage of the confusion to press into effect some of his personal ideas on the subject, regardless of the attitude of the majority of the cabinet. And now it appears that it is only the practice or principle of unified cabinet responsibility which causes MacDonald and men like Snowden and Henderson to shield their muddling colleague.

The curious spectacle is now being presented of a debate going on between MacDonald and Passfield on the one side, and the Zionists and the majority of the leading British statesmen on the other side as to the meaning and purport of the Passfield "White Paper". The statement is there, black on white. The Jewish people, supported by leading conservatives and Liberals, as well as Laborites, are construing the terms of the document as being a direct violation of the letter and spirit of the Balfour Declaration. MacDonald and Passfield on the other hand are stoutly maintaining that their recent formula is in perfect harmony with the same Declaration. The subject at issue is quite simple. It is a matter of reading plain English. Prima facie the construction placed on the document by Weizmann and by the Jewish people, and by Lloyd George, Baldwin, Chamberlain, Churchill, Smuts, and some of the most prominent members of the Labor party itself is to be taken as the correct one.

It is heartening to observe that the Jewish plea to the world for redress has received a favourable hearing. The most cheering feature is that there were men in England itself who came forward with promptitude to denounce their own government when they felt that it had erred and sinned. Of course, there are realists who will claim that Baldwin and Lloyd George rallied to the Jewish cause because they felt that they could thus serve the interests of their own parties. It is ever difficult to disentangle the selfish motives from the altruistic ones in any public spirited or idealistic effort. It is unwholesome to go around looking for ultimate motivation. The fact is that in this world of conflicting motives (who knows, perhaps if the Behaviorists are right, it is all only a matter of gland secretion and conditioned reflexes) we have had the foremost men in England take up our grievances and side with us.

The Labor government is now in a dilemma. It must have been borne in upon it that it has been unfair not to speak of its having been undiplomatic. It will no doubt offer some sort of compromise. It cannot be so obstinate in its sense of self-righteousness as to defy the opinion of the Jew throughout the world, and of the best minds in England. The worst feature from the government's point of view is that it claims not to have intended to effect a radical change of policy. It is all supposed to be a matter of the interpretation of the meaning of certain phraseology. If it is only a case of quibbling over words, there is nothing to stop it from having recourse to the huge reservoir of English vocabulary to find more suitable terminology. And

A PARABLE FROM THE PAST

Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath

Apropos of the present plight in Palestine we are reminded of a message from the past:

> "Woe unto them that go down to Egypt for help
> And rely on horses
> And trust in chariots, because they are many,
> And in horsemen because they are exceedingly mighty."

Whoso is wise let him understand this parable, whoso is profound let him discern in British imperialism the shadow of a long perished Kingdom of Egypt. Whoso is prudent let him heed the prophet's warning: "Yea, verily if ye have no faith, ye shall not endure."

HEROES OF WAR AND PEACE

On Monday morning next there comes another Thanksgiving and Armistice Day. Vast multitudes will visit cemeteries to decorate the graves of soldiers known and unknown—who have died in their country's cause. Some memories of war will be evoked, poignant sorrow will lacerate many a heart afresh and despite the honest grief of many, the spirit of militarism will once more be aroused as the nation's single out as the hero par excellence, as the paramount worthy of emulation and as the one who has served most courageously and self sacrificingly—only he who has died on the field of battle.

Worthy of homage as is the soldier who, without thought of self and devoid of ulterior motives, went forth to die in the defense of what he at least believed to be right—misled and deluded though in most instances he may have been—still it is not time that on a day set aside to celebrate the termination of war, to a day dedicated primarily to the cause of peace that we should pause to consider whether it is the soldier alone to whom humanity owes a debt of gratitude. Surely there are heroisms elsewhere than on the field of battle. Surely it is not to betray the heritage of the soldier to assert that there are others who have likewise served their fellow creatures nobly and unflinchingly. Men and women everywhere there are who have faced the dangers of daily life with a fortitude and bravery that is nowhere to be excelled.

What of the fireman who dashes without fear or hesitation into some building ablaze with devouring flames to snatch from its fiery maw some precious human life; what of the policeman who nightly walks his lonely beat prey to prowling gangsters and desperate bandits that he might protect those souls who slumber peacefully along his way. What of the scientist who toys with dangerous explosives and inoculates himself with germs of dread diseases; the physician who a myriad times each day comes into contact with contagious ailments, the nurse who tenderly watches over the dying and the mother who willingly relinquishes her life that another might be born. What of the toiler who risks the hazards of a gas filled mine that we might have warmth within our houses or he who guides a speeding locomotive through the night undaunted by the thought of the wrecks that might lie before. Surely our daily life abounds with rare heroisms and we hourly behold teeming about us heroes who have served in the saving, rather than the slaying of human life. Surely he who thus labors and sacrifices himself to rescue another from the brink of death whether on sick bed, in flaming edifice, or upon

"PEACE"

"Peace, peace, but there is no peace!" Thus cried a Jeremiah in his day. Thus cries every prophetic soul in our day.

It is now twelve years since we fought the "war to end war," but our progress in the cause of peace has been insignificant.

Of course the word "peace," as a result of the last war, has become tremendously popular. Thirty one years ago, when the first Hague Conference was held, this word was only heard in limited circles. Peace in our day has forged to the fore. Everybody at this hour believes in peace and abhors war. But peace will not come merely by talking about it. We must work for it in a practical manner. We must begin with our children and educate them in the cause of peace. Children ought not to be given toys of a military nature. Why not give little ones playthings that exemplify the saving of life? Children have a natural desire for "hero worship." This desire can be satisfied by telling them about those men who have promoted human knowledge and welfare — the heroes of peace and not of war. Instead of glorifying the soldier on the field of battle why not speak of the hospital nurse who often gives her own life at her post of duty while nursing the sick?

If we are sincere in the cause of peace we must ask the army and the navy of every land to stop playing "war games" in times of peace. These games are widely advertised and are most spectacular. They are played for the purpose of making people think about war. And if we continue "thinking war" — war is bound to continue.

RABBIS

Essentially, the Rabbi has always been a teacher of Judaism and teaching has ever been his main task.

This is not true of most Rabbis to-day — be they labelled Conservative, Reform or Orthodox.

Glance at the daily tasks of Rabbis — how onerous they are! Rabbis have come to mean everything to everybody. They are supposed to be "fund raisers" for the poor, organizers for the sick, ambassadors to the goyem, reviewers of books, propagandists, pastors, leaders in philanthropy, students of literature, educationalists and workers in the cause for a Palestine restored.

The multiplicity of labors thrust upon Rabbis of to-day is enough to make nervous wrecks of the strongest of men. We wonder whether members of congregations are aware of the fact that a Rabbi's job is not an easy one!

THE MINISTER'S WIFE

In "Plain Talk" for October there is published a most stimulating article on the drawbacks of being a minister's wife. I reprint in condensed form the last paragraphs. These ought to be interesting reading for women-congregants especially!

"But the greatest drawback to the ministry, as a career, both to the minister and his wife, is money. Until recently money was not supposed to be mentioned in the same breath with a minister. To this very day some of the older members of the various denominations wax indignant when they see liberals working for larger salaries and a more adequate pension system. They live in the times when a man was called by God to preach the gospel, and his wife was called by him.

Probably the world will never know how many ministers would have done better work if they had had more good beef steaks; how many clergymen's wives have grown thin and worn and slowly starved through leaving the best and most nutritious portions of food for their cherished families, or how many rectories or parsonages were unattractive because there was no money to make them even comfortable. The provision for old age is ridiculous. Should death intervene with the minister's work, his widow undertakes outside work to eke out the small pittance she has in order to clothe and educate her family.

No, the struggle as a minister's wife is too hard, and it is unfair to his children."

Business Men's Council Asks Support In Federation Campaign

A Dinner-Conference tendered by Edgar M. Berliner, A. Z. Cohen, A. H. Jassby, J. Kellert, Arthur Simon, and Samuel Hart was held at the Montefiore Club Tuesday evening, October 28, and resulted in the organizing of Special Name Representatives for the various divisions of the Business Men's Council. From addresses made by the chairman and by Allan Bronfman, chairman of the Executive Committee of Federation; Leon H. Fischel, Sam Bronfman, Chairman of the publicity committee; A. Z. Cohen, and N. Sommer it was apparent that the Federation Campaign to be launched November 23 to 30 will require greater initiative than any previous Federation Drive. B. Brodie, Harry Cohen, Nathan Deskin, B. Friedman, Arthur Levin, S. M. Oguinick, George Rabinovitch, Edward Simon, C. N. Sommer, H. L. Sourkes, Capt. Sebag Montefiore and Dr. M. Ratner pledged themselves to support the Business Men's Council in its endeavors to raise funds for the Constituent Societies of Federation. The address of thanks was given by J. P. Levee, Chairman of Business Men's Council, to all who promised co-operation.

Montreal Rabbi Says Jewish Enterprise Caused British Hostility

In a comprehensive expose of "certain fallacious contentions and mistruths that have led to the nullification of the Balfour Declaration and reduced it to a scrap of paper," Rabbi Charles Bender, of the Spanish and Portuguese Congregation, Stanley Street, suggested that the progressiveness and enterprise of the Jews are responsible for the British administrative hostility towards Jewish aspirations. The address, "Great Britain and Palestine" was given before members of his congregation on Saturday morning.

For the first time in British colonial history, Rabbi Bender said administrative officials have been brought into contact with a new type of colonist not the cringing mental ly deficient native but, intellectual college bred, city educated men and women, any one of whom has at least as much if not more intelligence than a government underling.

The problem of Palestine is not a Nazareth or a Turk. He comes to the government with intelligent demands. He can speak several languages and represents a body of highly developed mentality. He is not cringing and submissive but is proud and independent. Because of these attributes he has robbed the seventh power of that age-long fear of a subject race.

At the outset Rabbi Bender emphasized that the task of the British Government, and not the people, is to solve the problem. He said: "I have reason to believe that the people of Great Britain are not in sympathy with their government's policy as laid down in MacDonald's own handwriting and not. Of this point Rabbi Bender spoke as a possible view of the Labor party as an entity which had formulated a definite policy concerning the establishment of the Jewish national home. Tolerance and encouragement, he declared, and not hostility and suppression, should be the attitude of the British Government.

Dealing with the Simpson report, which [illegible] Rabbi Bender declared that [illegible] Jewish labor in Palestine [illegible] Jewish capital. "Our money is primarily for the purpose of building the national homeland by means of industry and agriculture, and not to establish employment bureaus.

"We might here ask what have the British administration or the rich effendi done for the country, or for the natives? Only three weeks ago the administration in Palestine announced that the revenue for 1929 has produced a surplus of £183,000. What has the Government done with its revenues? They have not even policed the country adequately. They have not even taken care of the lives of the inhabitants. We have even assumed and paid for such work as the draining of the malaria infested swamps. The Government did not assume this task and the Government now chides us for doing something which is pure altruism and brotherly love.

"We are not an ungrateful people. We are mindful of the liberties and privileges that England gave in the past to her Jewish subjects, but let her also be mindful of the loyalty and devotion that the Jews have shown to Great Britain. It is hard to believe that the last word has been spoken. We can only attribute this blunder to the new king who arose in Egypt and knew not Joseph," to Lord Passfield whose mind has been taken up with economic theories all his life, and knows nothing about political or international obligations, or the aspirations of the Jewish ideal. We can but attribute this blunder to the author of the report who went to Palestine and saw nothing but Arabs, but when he came in touch with Jewish life like Nelson, he placed his telescope to his blind eye, and saw nothing.

"Meanwhile, we Jews must stand united more strongly than ever. We may have received a temporary setback, but we have established certain bulwarks in our work which can never be removed. England may repudiate her promises, but she cannot take away that gallant new Yishub in Palestine, the work of thirteen hard years. To be discouraged at this time, would be to admit failure in ourselves. After all, we are engaged in a national and political enterprise and not in building philanthropic institutions. We have to deal with the entire perspective of a nation in the re-making, and not with localized charitable undertakings, so let us not be disheartened."

Toronto Jewish Mass Meeting Condemns Policy of Britain

That the British Government's recently adopted policy in Palestine would have an echo in the form of a protest in the next session of the Canadian Parliament, was the surmise made by Samuel Factor, only Liberal M. P. from Toronto, to members of the Toronto Jewish community who packed Massey Hall Sunday, November 2nd., in protest against the recent statement of policy of the British Government in Palestine. Denunciations, on the part of many speakers, of the MacDonald Government for the adoption of this policy were cheered by the meeting, which, by a standing vote, unanimously adopted a resolution charging the Labor Government with "breach of trust."

Mayor Wemp and Controller Simpson were among the speakers. His Worship declared that the new policy toward Palestine did not represent British opinion at all, and when the final vote was taken in Parliament he was disinclined to believe that the understanding given the Jews by the Balfour Declaration would be repudiated. Controller Simpson declared "Whatever party is in power in Great Britain should observe the letter and spirit of its agreements." He felt that the influence of the Governments of the British Dominions would be exerted in favor of the fulfillment of Great Britain's undertakings with regard to the Jews and Palestine. "As a personal friend of Premier MacDonald's," he declared, "I will urge him to honor the obligations under the Balfour Declaration."

The protest meeting was held under the auspices of the Zionist Council, members of the Jewish Legion and the Poale Zion. Meyer W. Weingal presided.

The meeting was held on the thirteenth anniversary of the famous Balfour Declaration in 1917. Mr. Weingal said that the anniversary had been observed for twelve years to offer up thanks. But the present gathering was to express indignation against the blow struck at the heart of the Jewish people. "No power on earth," he declared, in conclusion, "is about enough to halt our march back to Palestine."

"The present British Government," said Mr. Factor, "has allowed the tradition of British honor and justice to be submerged by political expediency." He denounced the Passfield statement of policy as "ignoble and infamous," making of the Balfour Declaration "a scrap of paper" and nullifying the mandate from the League of Nations. He had confidence that the British people would not permit this repudiation even by its own Government. He declared that he would urge in Parliament that the Canadian Government use its influence with the British Government to see that justice was done to the Jews in the matter.

Rabbi S. Sachs expressed his bewilderment that the hopes and aspirations of Jews should be frustrated by "our friends." J. J. Glass, speaking for the Jewish Legionnaires, recalled the Jewish recruiting for service in Palestine which had followed the Balfour Declaration. Tonight, he declared, they were met to protest against a great betrayal. The resolution was introduced by E. F. Singer, K.C., M.P.P. It declared the meeting's deep sense of disappointment in the Passfield statement of policy. "We declare," it continued "that the statement is a travesty on the letter and spirit of the Balfour Declaration and the Palestine mandate." The suspension of Jewish immigration and limitations on purchase of land by Jews, it went on, "are in direct contravention of terms of the Palestine mandate and constitute a violation of trust on the part of the Labor Government."

In introducing the resolution, Mr. Singer referred to Premier Ferguson and Premier Bennett, in laudatory terms, for which he was criticized in a subsequent address in Yiddish by Baruch Zuckerman, Leader of the Poale Zion of New York City, on the ground of introducing politics. Mr. Singer said the Zionist movement could not expect any better treatment from the present Labor Government than our own Premier received on his recent mission to Great Britain.

Speaking in Yiddish, Mr. Zuckerman roused the enthusiasm of the audience to many wild outbursts of applause.

Jewish Labor in Montreal Expresses Disapproval of British Attitude

Organized Jewish labor in Montreal expressed disapproval of the attitude of the British Colonial Office towards the further upbuilding of the Jewish homeland in Palestine. That interest in the latest developments arising from Lord Passfield's declaration is maintained was evidenced by the mass attendance at the Monument National protest meeting Sunday afternoon. So great was the demand for seats that two policemen were stationed at the entrance leading to the main auditorium to prevent newcomers from joining the throngs inside. Even standing room was at a premium for the orators representing important organizations connected with the rehabilitation of Palestine. The proceedings were carried on in Yiddish and Bert Locker, representing Jewish labor leaders, H. M. Caiserman, A. M. Klein, educational director of Young Judaea, M. Brenman of Poale Zion, L. Zuckerman and I. Bobrove of Poale Zion, were the principal speakers. Bert Locker, the chief speaker, voiced the opinion that the Labor party in England was not responsible for the action of Lord Passfield. He believed that steps would be taken shortly to counteract the influence of the declaration.

Young Judaea's stand on Jewish immigration and colonization into Palestine was outlined by Mr. Klein. "The Labor party is being misrepresented," said he. They [illegible] would thereby duplicate [illegible] in the reference to the Simpson Report. Shall we say that it is over when the Jewish people are being made the scapegoats of British interests? Decidedly no," he added, "for we shall continue where we left off with greater enthusiasm."

H. M. Caiserman emphasized the fact that the Simpson report and Lord Passfield's declaration did not take into consideration the years of toil that transformed desert sands into productive pastures and thriving colonies. He pointed out that the greatest portion of the land in Palestine belonged to Arab effendis, so that there was a fallacy in the statement that the Arabs as a whole were being made landless by the Jews.

I. Bobrove, of the Poale Zion Organization, reiterated the sentiments of the previous speakers when he stated that the work of rehabilitation would be carried on as heretofore. L. Zucker and H. Brenman were joint chairmen at the meeting.

The resolution that is being forwarded to the Labor party, Smith Square, London, England, states:

"Jewish workers' mass meeting at Montreal emphatically protest against the statement on the Palestine policy of the British Colonial Office, which bars Jewish immigration and curtails land purchases for colonization purposes. We are embittered particularly at unjust attacks on Palestine Jewish labor, its institutions and colonization methods. We expect the British Labor movement, which always viewed the creative work of Palestine Jewish Labor with understanding and sympathy, to reject policies which are in contradiction of the traditional policies of the Labor party and of Britain."

MAY ISSUE SUPPLEMENTARY STATEMENT ON PALESTINE

It is probable that Lord Passfield, Minister of Colonies, will issue in the near future a statement supplementing his White Paper concerning the British Government's Palestine policy. Such action was urged upon him by a meeting of Labor members of Parliament, who declared his first statement had created a most deplorable impression on Jews throughout the world.

Lord Passfield's party critics told him very emphatically that both the tone and contents of the White Paper were very unfortunate and that he had made a bad matter worse by repeated assertion that there had been no departure from former Government policy.

Lord Passfield admitted that the wording might have been unfortunate and perhaps open to anti-Jewish interpretation, which was not intended by the Colonial Office. In which case he would be glad to make another statement further explaining the Government's position. It was also suggested to him that in the supplementary statement he should say something about the possibilities of developing Transjordania for the Arabs making more land available to the Jews in Palestine, and doing away with the necessity of checking immigration.

It is also reported that Premier MacDonald himself thinks another statement from the Colonial Office would be advisable. As opportunity for a Palestine debate in the House of Commons within ten days has been promised, it is likely that the new Passfield utterance will come before that time.

Lord Passfield, Colonial Secretary, and Dr. Chaim Weizmann, Zionist leader, stuck to their guns in the controversy over Palestine, although Lord Passfield's letter contains personal expressions of friendliness which were absent from last week's declarations.

The Colonial Secretary still insists that Dr. Weizmann and the Zionists have misconstrued the purpose of the Government policy, while Dr. Weizmann in reply, is equally insistent that the new declaration violates the Palestine mandate and makes his continuance as president of the World Zionist organization impossible.

"I must begin," Lord Passfield's letter runs, "by expressing my sincere regret that, after so many years of devoted toil, you have thought it necessary to resign. I regret it the more, that despite our past conversations, your action can only be based on an imperfect appreciation of the Government's attitude and intentions.

"On various occasions His Majesty's Government has not failed to express its admiration of the work done under your auspices for upbuilding the Jewish national home, and the fact that it felt bound in a recent White Paper to make certain important criticisms, must not be taken as a general censure on your past work as a whole."

Dr. Weizmann replied with denials of Lord Passfield's assertions. In matters of immigration and land policy, he wrote, the White Paper is inconsistent with the spirit of the mandate," and marks a "vital reversal of policy."

He concludes with a vigorous denial, that the Government consulted him in time to affect the contents of the White Paper.

JEWISH PROTESTS NOT ON AGENDA AT GENEVA

British policy in Palestine may be discussed privately at the meeting of the League of Nations permanent mandate commission which convened November 4 in Geneva, although Jewish protests against the policy were not on the agenda. Marquis Theodoli of Italy, president of the commission, announced the receipt of British documents concerning the Government's policies on immigration, colonization and agriculture in Palestine.

AUXILIARY PLAN TO UNITE SOCIETIES

On the initiative of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the United Talmud Torahs, an effort is being made to unite all auxiliaries of synagogues and all Jewish women's societies in order to carry on a campaign among the Jewish women of Montreal for funds for the completion of the Hebrew Educational Institute under construction on St. Joseph Boulevard, corner of Jeanne Mance Street. To discuss the brick campaign, a meeting took place, Tuesday afternoon, November 4, at Shaar Hashomayim Synagogue assembly hall. Rabbi M. Nagrees, Dean of the Hebrew Religious College, of New York and I. J. Charness, chairman of the special brick campaign of the United Talmud Torahs spoke. Mrs. A. S. Radovsky is president of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the United Talmud Torahs.

ATTACKED IN STREET AND ROBBED

Attacked from behind by two men near his home at 10.15 p.m. Saturday, November 1, Morris Zelcovitz, of 291 Maplewood Avenue, Apartment 4, was knocked to the ground, [illegible] and robbed of $146 which he was carrying in his pocket. The men escaped. Zelcovitz ran to his home which was nearby, and called the police. He gave them a good description of the two men and stated that one of them threatened him with a revolver.

Confused By Jewish Law, Judge Uses Criminal Code

Can Jews conform to their religious rites and doctrines, who use the tramways as a medium of transportation on the Sabbath and more particularly on the Feast of the Days over and the Day of Atonement?

This was the question which threatened to overshadow all the legal issues in the case of Max Feldman before Chief Judge Perrault in the Court of Sessions until the magistrate decided that he was not well versed in the laws of the Jewish religion and proceeded to render a judgment in the criminal code. He acquitted Feldman.

Feldman, who has operated a junk store at 2540 Manufacturers street for 11 years, was charged with receiving 1,500 pounds of scrap brass, stolen from the Canadian National Railways. Witnesses were brought by the Crown who affirmed that on April 17 last they sold the brass to Feldman.

In defence the junk dealer called his brother-in-law, H. Kolstaff, 122 Seventh avenue, Lachine. Kolstaff remembered the date of April 17 and recalled positively that the accused spent the whole day at his (the witness's) house. What caused him to remember this so clearly, he stated, was the fact that April 17 was the Feast of the Passover, and the accused and witness remained together in the latter's home observing the rules ordained by their religion for that day.

"During the day we went to the synagogue," he stated.

"How did you get to the synagogue?" queried Joseph Cohen, K.C., counsel for the C.N.R.

"By the street car."

Mr. Cohen maintained that this was disallowed by Jewish law, but the witness maintained that it was quite permissible and in this was confirmed by his lawyer, who is also Jewish. A vigorous and heated argument ensued between the lawyers as to whether or not a Jew may travel by street car on the day in question. "Why a Jew may even light a cigarette on the feast of the Passover, if he so desires," the lawyer for the defence remarked.

It remained a question as to whether an authority on Jewish religious laws should not be consulted for an expert opinion.

"I do not know nor will I decide that question," the judge stated. "But what I will decide is that the complaint has not been substantiated and I hereby acquit the accused.

The abject contrition of that stubborn boy penetrated his mother's daze, melting her on the instant to pity and love. "Oh, George—George dear!" she gasped. Lifting her head, she threw her arms around him and dragged him closer to her. Huddled helplessly over him, she felt herself go numb, stunned; all at once, she could no longer be sure that he was there, pressed against her. "George!" she cried with the strident frenzy of a woman who has had her child snatched from her breast. Then, to her half-hysterical relief, the sensation of his breathing nearness came back to her. "Don't go—don't leave me yet," she whimpered.

Suddenly her voice rose to a thin inhuman shrillness, as if she were merely the frenzied medium of some bloodless spirit in travail. "I couldn't have stood it without you—all these years — I'd have left him—I'd have left him long ago." Under the duress of her fainting pain, she had been racked into confession. Without her knowledge, she had given up her secret to a little frightened boy, had drawn him under the shadow of her gloom.

"Mother—can't you hear?" George was shaking her now, shouting to her through teeth that chattered. "Let me sleep with you to-night just to-night. Oh can't you hear?"

Her head had dropped heavily over her arm; but at that call she fiercely roused herself. With the swift realization that she was being sucked down into the vortex over which she had hung all day, she started back from him. She had been struck by a delirious fear: unless she broke her drowning clutch, she would drag him with her into oblivion.

"No, no you mustn't stay. Go now, George—go!" Distracted, she yet spoke with the ringing command, the unanswerable authority that had silenced every protest in the past.

For a moment she knew nothing, heard nothing but a hammering clamor. Then, through the din, there came the sharp sound of a door closing.

He had gone. She was alone.

CHAPTER V

George, despite an aching fatigue, had not slept. Unable to keep his lids down over his straining eyeballs, he had lain on his back and stared up into the darkness. Hurried footsteps had thudded continually outside his door; he had heard voices, pitched to a tense unnatural key—the voices of people routed out of warm beds to assist at a solemn mystery. Steadily, his terror had grown; it had thinned his blood, cooled the hot turmoil of his brain to ice. He lay, held stiff and taut for hours, in that strange freezing suspense.

All at once, a galvanic thrill had twitched his body up and out of the bed. In his bare feet, he rushed to the door. His arms and legs moved with queer angular jerks. For a moment, his stark fingers could not turn the knob.

At last he was out in the corridor, bound under the glare of the light; but he knew that Annie, his nurse, was there and that she was crying.

"Annie—what's the matter?" He could hardly get the words out; the muscles around his stomach quaked.

She backed up to the wall, her mouth open, panic in her swollen eyes. "Oh, Master George—get back to bed get back this minute, dear," she quavered.

He could see her now, her face a mottled red from her weeping.

"I won't go back." His voice was a mere broken squeak. "Tell me what's the matter, Annie. I won't go to bed till I know."

Heavily she dropped down in front of him and took his head between her hands. "It's your mother." The words came from her on a swelling sob. "She's gone, darling." She had seen in his staring mazed eyes that he was prepared for the truth. Somehow he seemed to know it already. "Your mother's dead."

He dragged her hands down from his face. "Annie—listen—don't come after me. Leave me alone—in there Annie" he begged piteously then turned away and tottered back into his room. He shut the door ran for his bed and crawled between the covers. There he lay flat on his stomach. Shudders coursed over his body curdled his marrow. His mother was dead; but he could not cry.

After long minutes of huddled cold, of dry whimpering spasms, the savage animal wail of his grief at last broke from him. Over and over, he had been muttering "mother, mother" with a stupefied insistence. The word had been only a muffled drumming on his ears, a monotonous knocking at his stunned consciousness; but suddenly the dull sound had awakened him to a startled tension. "Mother," he mumbled once more into the pillow and in his voice there was recognition and a plea to be comforted. Never before had that cry for help gone unanswered; she had always been at his side in a moment, bending over him, stroking his forehead with her strong cool fingers. For his anguish now, no balm could be effectual but the healing touch of her hand on the wound; but she was deaf to his call. His hurt must go on bleeding, forever unstaunched. No matter how long he lived, any brutal shock would strike into the core of that pain, would set the bruised nerves quivering; and the new ache would be intensified by the sore pulsations of the old. The full understanding of his desolation had flooded over him. He gave a rough indrawn groan that parched his throat like a handful of sand flung into his mouth. Then the scalding tears forced themselves out of his eyes and he began to sob.

Later, he stood with Morton nd Jessica and looked down at the inscrutable sealed face of the dead woman. The three children had crumpled together in a silent terror. Their sorrow had made them reach out blindly for one another, had blurred their definite little identities. Morton had forgotten the airs of the self-assured young dandy; Jessica had lost her strutting bluster; George was no longer hugging to himself some foolish inexplicable grievance. They had loved their mother; she had died last night; they knew nothing but their grief, felt only the harsh physical distress of their sobbing. Behind them Morgenthal stood, his tawny eyes glazed and glaring—a man of guilt and shame, silently going over in his mind the long record of his polite cruelties, of his insufferable suave crimes.

The children put out their hands to their mother but they dared not touch her white coldness. They shrank from the calm of her face, unrecognizing, remote, pitilessly indifferent to their plight.

Jessica and Morton crept away to their father and clung to him for support.

Silently, he bent over and kissed them. Under his tenderness, their crying quieted a little and gushed from them in a gentler, almost a refreshing flow.

But George remained beside his mother. Dying, she had told her sufferings at his father's door. From now on his heart must hold not only his sorrow but that bequeathed rancor. Morton and Jessica could turn to their father. George had no one; he was nakedly destitute, bleeding and alone.

"I've been here half an hour I told you I'd come over at eight." Miriam Morgenthal spoke in the tones of the man who always kept an appointment.

"Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without rancour,
That for what it cost me to be free,
I might have had an anchor."

Lord Birkenhead, who died recently after a vigorous, vivid career of grappling with adverse circumstance and after achieving fortune, renown and high station, began life as a son of poverty and obscurity. Not only that but he was not considered a very bright boy. When he sat for his entrance examination to Harrow the examiners dubbed young F. E. Smith a "half-wit." Had F. E. Smith been a Jewish boy he might or might not have become Lord Birkenhead but it is highly questionable whether he would have been called a half-wit. He might have been a half-wit but he would hardly ever have been called that except in fond fun.

In the gleaming lexicon of words applied to Jewish youth, even tender, there is no such demeaning word as half-wit. All Jewish boys may not be god-like and certainly all Jewish boys are not rich but try and find a Jewish boy who is not smart. On the other hand, it is just as good to be called a half-wit and then to find himself in a seat of the mighty. Is it like a Jewish boy to be called a genius and then later to die having achieved nothing better than a life of mediocrity? Yes and the cause lies not in the boy but in the perfection with which the nature of most Jewish parents combines with what is called the system of education.

The Gentile parent will accept praise of his child with a modest, almost silent acknowledgment. His attitude is one of "watchful waiting." When his son has established himself in the world as a useful, well-adjusted individual the Gentile parent may take the credit due him as the parent of such a person. But his household is not holy ground where genius should go undetected. If his children become something exceptional he regards the development as a fact. To the Jewish parent his child is not at the mercy, already. In fact if his son is admittedly not the brilliant success then he is sure that the child is a dullard if not indeed a mental moron. If the son shows aptitude, parts, then he is the subject of continuous panegyric. At the risk of making the child self-conscious and swell-headed the parent reckons contentedly against the Yiddish maxim that the apple falls close to the tree. The child has no use for average child, which isn't the worst thing that could happen to any human, but by the time the brains have all been sung out of him, boy scouts and the child are living in a fool's paradise of which it is difficult to dispossess him.

The great secret of success is vogue everywhere on this continent and success should be the normal experience of the Jewish child. For more years than we have been recording long lists of Jewish winners of various prizes, given by schools and colleges in a system which is not of education [illegible] something entirely different from education. Under the present system a bright child who applies himself can store a remarkable amount of information. He memorizes a bunch of facts and at the appropriate season of passing the examinations and even his finals may bring him a degree or a diploma done. He is a little prosier and less brilliant than one degree but none of the marks that he will get will be a reliable understanding of what he may or may not be able to do. Success is not guaranteed. He may still not be educated.

In every town and city are people of whom it is said that they ought to have done better. They were so clever and brilliant. They ate this and that, they said this and that when they were at such and such an age. Now that the plain people have come to be alive and contributing without having put in the performance the great promise of achievement that they gave it looks more as if they and parents can be believed.

Of personal observation I speak when the Brest Association said in September that most brilliant children demonstrated after they were submitted to what is called examination. Insofar as this is the fault of the general system it can not be remedied in Canada for a long time. This is a modern disease engaged in harming a living and still playing with the automobile at a delightful day. The public school system is a failure in a way and the pride of the country. Although education in a few isolated spots in the United States are taking away from set discipline and knowledge-cramming the process is very slow and costly and it will be a long time before anything better is available.

But the devotion of Jewish parents to the pleasure of exaggerating the scholastic achievements of their offspring could be lessened to the ultimate benefit of the child. It is a mistake to bring him up a little drunk with praise. He will have to have more and more of it and will sink down into common-placeness when the world in disgust refuses to feed his conceit with the increasing amount of sugar it takes. His over-estimation of self which he has been fed on in the home will make him a fool in imagining that all about him are inferior. Time and again his inability to appraise himself with any sense of proportion will trip up to defeat him. If he is bright and level-headed it is a shame to spoil him by giving him an inflated evaluation of himself. If he is an average or a dull child it is a crime to fool him and leave him perplexed and at a loss to find himself in a world for which he was unfitted as a little child.

THE ENEMY'S GATES

who couldn't suppress his irritation when his neat schedule for the day received a set-back. "I tidied up the room while I was waiting."

"Thanks." George broke into a sheepish grin. "It needed tidying." He tossed his coat across the centertable, put his hat on the mantelpiece and threw himself down on the window-seat opposite his brother. Locking his hands behind his head, he stretched out his long legs; Morton, silent and prim, drew his knees up under his chin, so that George couldn't inadvertently wipe his feet on him.

"Sorry I'm late." George was humble. "I worked all afternoon till past seven."

"Did you finish?" Morton's courteous question indicated doubt.

George gave a disgusted grunt. "I got stuck in the middle of it," he admitted. "You know—and Porter knows that I can't write. It's just a waste of everybody's time."

"Well, let's see it, anyhow," Morton suggested without great enthusiasm. "Maybe we can get it into some kind of shape.

"Oh Lord, it was hopeless, Morton," George could jeer at the very recollection. "I tore the damned thing up."

Morton shook his head and pursed up his mouth. "That was foolish," he commented, with the strained harassed politeness of one attempting to discipline a bull-headed child. "Why did you do that?"

"If I hadn't, Porter would have," George grumpily defended himself. "What is the sense of asking me to write a paper on Botticelli?" He glowered around the room, as if in morose appeal to some unseen tribunal. "I was wandering," he reflected after a moment, tapping a restless foot against the windowpane. "I was wondering if I could get an extension of time."

"You're always wondering if you can get an extension," Morton reminded him. "You've done that to death." He swung himself off the window-seat. "Come on, George. You've got to do that essay to-night."

Going over to the table, he took up his brother's overcoat, carried it into the bedroom and hung it in the closet. On his way back, he paused in front of the mantel mirror, examined his image with keen complacency and tightened the knot in his necktie. Then he sat down at the table. He picked up a pencil and, after testing the lead on his finger, threw it back into the pen-tray.

"Don't you ever sharpen your pencils?" he wanted to know.

"No—when they get dull I buy new ones." George explained with some ruefulness, "if I happen to think of it."

Morton had by now slipped his own perfectly pointed pencil out of his vest-pocket and was rapping it against the table.

"I'm going to smoke one cigarette,' George remarked in answer to the exasperated tattoo.

"All right. One cigarette," Morton curtly agreed. "But if you don't get started after that, I'm going home."

From the wall, a framed photograph of Rachel Morgenthal looked down with eyes of grave interest at the two young men. She sat in her morning-room in the New York house. A book lay open on her knees; the light from the reading-lamp illumined her skin to the warm white glow of porcelain. She wore a dress of rich heavy brocade; Morton could still have described it in minute detail the color, the exact cut of the sleeves, the length of the train. It was proof of her proud strength that she looked neither grotesque nor pathetic in her old-fashioned clothes. She leaned forward a trifle in her chair, as if she were about to settle, firmly and finally, some stormy childish dispute or to solve some perplexing problem in arithmetic. Many times, at the school room window, she had put aside her embroidery and, in just this attitude of patient alertness, had listened to George's grievance against hypothetical paper-hangers and diggers of post-holes. She had been dead for ten years now. In his college-room, her older boy was fussing and fuming over Sandro Botticelli; after a whole afternoon of hard work, he had nothing to show for his diligence but a few scraps of paper in a waste-basket. Her younger son, punctilious and efficient, sat under her gentle eyes with a six-page essay on this same Botticelli in his hand—a document of exemplary neatness, specious clever and elegantly superficial.

Had their mother come back from her grave, she would have passed these tall youths by without recognition; but, hearing them talk together for only one moment, she would have known them. Though their shrill treble voices had deepened, George's had the old note of defensive stubbornness; he seemed to mutter warning asides to himself, rather than to converse. Morton still talked with a loud resonant clarity, still suffered the air-waves to carry his remarks out to the world at large. It was odd for a drawing-room cynic, this habit of speaking as through a megaphone.

"While you're smoking, I might as well read you some of my paper," Morton had crisply announced. "It'll give you a general idea of what Porter wants. This, for instance." His eye had lighted on a passage that evidently tickled his vanity. "'In the drawing for the twenty-eighth chapter of the Purgatorio, Botticelli has given us a scene of surpassing loveliness and idyllic peace. Dante stands gazing wistfully at the exquisite maiden Matilda, who, as she sings, glides with a motion too delicate to be of this world. The landscape is of ravishing beauty, with its slender trees and its brook-side grasses. One breathes the light breezes. For space-composition, the sketch is incomparable.'" Here Morton paused and stole a sly oblique glance at George.

"My God, that's good." George disconsolately shied his cigarette-butt into the fire-place. "But can't you see the ass I'd make of myself if I tried to cut loose that way?"

Morton did not relish the implication of the words "cut loose." He had considered the passage a bit of sound criticism, not a mere rhapsodic gush. "It's true, every word of it," he asserted with a certain hauteur. "I've got my feet on the ground."

THE ENEMY'S GATES

"I meant the style, the way you said it," George assured him. "That's where I fall down."

"Oh, the style!" Mollified, Morton shrugged. "Porter doesn't insist on style. All you have to do is to give good sensible reasons why you like some of the drawings better than others."

George, after a moment of deep pondering, nodded. "I can do that well enough," he claimed. "Suppose I tell you about it. You can make a rough draft and put in a few adjectives. When you go home, I'll copy it."

Since Mrs. Morgenthal's death, the legend that George was a grade ahead of Morton in lessons had automatically broken down. George, as it turned out, had been more discouraged than resentful. Hurt by the collapse of his prestige, he yet had blamed himself alone. His spirit had lost a little of its former tough resistance; in the presence of his self-assured young brother, he had come to feel an aching sense of inferiority. At first, he had struggled hard to go his own mistaken way without ever asking for help; but before long he found that Morton had already taken over his mother's place as teacher and was giving forth terse instructions. A gloomy admiration had soon begun to stir in George's consciousness. For years now, he had let Morton pull him out of all his scholastic difficulties. Occasionally, if he thought he was being pushed about with too bossy arrogance, he flared into a black temper; at such times, Morton withdrew from the scene in frigid dignity—he always had the satisfaction, an hour or a day later, of seeing his pupil bumbled. George, though incapable of a frank apology, would seek him out and confess his remorse by his look of glum wretchedness; Morton, without any direct reference to the recent misunderstanding, would simply take up the discussion of Latin grounds or Greek figures of speech where it had been interrupted. His attitude would be even brusquer and more peremptory than before; George, however, would be willing by now to put up with a tart snub.

In a way, they both profited by their queer relationship: Morton's conceit drew fat succulent nourishment from his labors as preceptor; George, with the aid of his brother, had somehow managed to worry through three and a half years at Yale, had been steered each June, though by the narrowest of margins, past the flunking mark. On Morton's watch-chain there dangled at present a Phi Beta Kappa key, against it tinkled the Chi Psi Theta triangle, his reward for the facile little essays he had contributed to the "Literary Magazine." George's watch-chain was bare of badges of merit. At commencement this year, Morton would casually, half-disdainfully accept a diploma; George would pounce upon his in a dizzy incredulity, would sneak away with it as stealthily as a man who has stolen something when no one was looking.

"Hurry-up—I'm ready, George." Morton had laid aside his Botticelli essay; his pencil was poised above a blank sheet of paper now. "I've got to play some bridge at nine-thirty. That gives us just an hour."

George picked up the waste-basket from the floor, put it between his legs and began to rummage through it. Having extracted numerous bits of torn paper, he spread them out on his stomach, cocked an inquisitive eye at them, then set to work sorting them. "I'm in luck!" His face brightened. "Here's a whole page that goes together." After a short grumbling soliloquy, "'Canto twenty-two, Inferno,'" he dictated, warming a bit to his task. "'The lake of pitch. Terrible subject but Botticelli got a devilish lot of fun out of it. Good comic relief—demons stewing so hard they fall into the lake themselves and have to be fished out by their friends.' How's that, Morton?"

As a matter of fact, it shrewdly summed up the quality of the drawing. Morton felt a trifle nettled by his brother's discernment; making no comment, he industriously wrote down a few lines. When he had finished, "'Canto twenty-two, Inferno,'" he read aloud. "'Despite the ghastly significance of this episode—wherein the King of Navarre's servant outwits a plaguing swarm of demons—the comic touch is there. Botticelli, sensitive soul though he was, had a rowdyish sense of the ridiculous that rather pains his devotees.'" That last sentence had been designed as a subtle rebuke to George.

"Well, Dante was a rowdy too, then," George broke in.

Morton ignored the teasing reminder. "'Even so,'" he continued, "'one can't help smiling at these overconscientious imps, two of whom have plunged headlong into the boiling pitch and are being helped out by their confrères. Not one of the greatest of the drawings—but a delight as sheer decoration.'"

George was jubilant. "You see, I did have some good ideas on that picture," he announced with ingenuous pride. "I can't express what I think—that's my trouble. I'm afraid I'll make a fool of myself."

George, who for the most part was baffled by his own character, who pored over the secrets of his heart as over indecipherable hieroglyphics, once in a while had a lightning inspiration, when the gift of that strange tongue would descend upon him for a moment. So now, he had suddenly interpreted his nature with real insight. The fear of mockery—in this instance the dread of a derisive snicker from his Art instructor—dried up his powers of expression like an acrid astringent. Bristlingly alert to ridicule, he faced the world with the feverish eyes of a treed lynx and dared it to torment him.

the city street is worthy of as deep an expression of gratitude from the world he benefits as is any soldier no matter how noble or brave or true.

"Here is an army serving without intermission and knowing no armistice, an army that endures both pain and privation and that numbers its casualties by the hundreds of thousands. It goes to its hard, perilous battles without decorations and without honors. It does not wait for "The roll of the stirring drum and the trumpet that speaks of fame."

But how sadly remiss is society in its treatment of this mighty army of defense against hunger, sickness disorder and extinction! How miserably unhonored and unsung these humble heroes are. No day is set apart to sing their praise, to decorate their graves or to honor their memories. No statues or cenotaphs arise in our civic centers to bear witness to their splendid deeds. Forgotten they are; neglected, scorned.

As an attempt to render some bit of tribute to these unremembered heroes of peace and to repay but a pittance of the huge debt of gratitude we owe them, the recently formed Toronto Council of the International Fellowship of Reconciliation is to initiate in our community a unique service which we ourselves brought to Canada from Cincinnati where it first introduced by Dr. Abraham Cronbach of the Hebrew Union College some seven years ago.

Early this Monday morning a small group will gather at the chapel of Mount Pleasant Cemetery and with short addresses of appreciation for the services rendered by these heroes of social construction, wreaths will be placed upon the grave of an industrial worker, a fireman, a police man, a nurse and a physician all of whom have sacrificed themselves in the cause of peace, all of whom have relinquished their lives that others might live. This ceremony is to begin promptly at nine o'clock so that it might in no wise conflict with the usual functions of Armistice day and likewise that there might be manifested the true spirit of devotion to the cause of peace by those who rise thus early to honor them who have served and died for humanity's sake.

This solemn ceremony will inaugurate an entire day set apart by the Fellowship for a consideration of the problem of peace. At ten o'clock under its supervision and through the courtesy of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation a moving picture "High Treason" is to be shown free to high school and university youth. This picture is a vivid portrayal of the conflict between the forces that make for war and the spirits who would fight for peace and is to be followed by a general discussion of the many issues which this splendid picture presents.

In the afternoon in the Lecture Hall of Yorkminster Church a Conference on Peace is to be held with the Honorable J. S. Woodsworth, Labor M.P. of Winnipeg in the chair while at eight o'clock in the evening with the co-operation of the Woman's International League Mr. Woodsworth is to speak on Disarmament with Dr. Salem Bland presiding.

It will be a gala day indeed in the cause of peace and it is hoped that it will lead toward that great day when Peace will arouse the same fervor nd enthusiasm which so unfortunately war still does and when the imagination of men will be as fired by visions of all these soldiers of Peace as in the past they have been solely by the heroes of the battlefield. It is the Fellowship of Reconciliation's debut. It is hoped that its labors and dreams will not have been in vain.

It is our most fervent wish that our Jewish people in particular shall participate largely in these various exercises. We who have so passionately loved that precious word Sholom and who have come down the ages with the greeting "Alechem Sholom" upon our lips shall we not lend our fullest support, our presence, and encouragement to so noble a venture? And just a personal word ere we leave you for this week. We happen to be the Chairman of this day's activities and the President of this Fellowship. We pray that our own coreligionists will not desert us nor fail steadfastly and fervidly, to hold up our arms and to grant us strength that Peace might triumph and that Love might reign supreme.

apparently it will use this bit of casuistry as a means of escape from its difficult position.

From the standpoint of the Jews, however, and of those who are interested that a fair deal be given to them, the significance of the situation lies in this, that the present government, having once shown its moral remissness and its unreliability, will have to offer definite guarantees of good faith before action will be resumed on the strength of its representations or promises. For the past year, ever since the Arab riots, the present government has been disingenuous and vacillating. The Jewish people had been living up to their end of the bargain fairly and effectively. Once their confidence in the trustee has been shaken—justifiedly so, on admission—they will require an unequivocal formulation of their rights as a condition precedent to their continuance of support to the Palestine venture. The Jews want Palestine. They want a homeland there. The world wants a Jewish homeland in the old Jewish land. The Jews will not be satisfied now to proceed with the building process on the shifting sand of vague promises and meaningless equivocation.

The British public have demonstrated that they regard their national obligations as sacred. If therefore the present government will yield to the clamor of an outraged national conscience, and abandon its mischievous policy, then there is a chance that the Zionist cause will get some good out of the evil. The beneficent consequence of the crisis will be clarification of the situation in all its aspects. We will have found out just where we stand in the Palestine matter.

The critical moment is now at hand. If the government will remain obdurate in its folly, and persevere in its anti-Jewish policy, then the Zionist movement—indeed Jewish life—will find itself in a puzzling position at the cross roads. Epochal decisions will have to be made that will bear fatefully on the future of the Jewish nation. A.B.B.

EARLY DIAGNOSIS

Remarkable progress has been made in the campaign against tuberculosis. In spite of the fact that no specific means of preventing or curing this disease has been discovered, nevertheless, year by year, its ravages are being lessened. This progress is encouraging and should serve to stimulate us to even greater efforts to overcome a disease which still remains one of the most powerful foes against which we have to contend.

We should never lose sight of the fact that tuberculosis is preventable and curable. The majority of persons become infected with the germs of tuberculosis early in life, but not all of them develop the disease. In most cases, the germs lie dormant because the individual's powers of resistance are maintained at a sufficiently high level to hold the germs in check.

It is when our resistance has been broken down that the dormant germs become active and tuberculosis develops. The disease is always due to the action of the germs which get their opportunity when, through bad living conditions, worry, over-fatigue, or some debilitating disease, the resistance of the body is weakened.

If the disease does develop, the question of cure naturally becomes the most important consideration. Whether or not the disease will be cured, and the length of time required for cure, depend chiefly upon the early diagnosis of the disease.

When the disease is diagnosed early, there is every chance of its responding to proper treatment. The longer the interval between the onset of the disease and the beginning of treatment, the less chance there is for cure, and the time required for treatment is proportionately increased.

A practical consideration is that it is in the group of persons who have been exposed to tuberculosis that new cases most frequently develop. The more intimate and prolonged the exposure, especially if during childhood, the greater the likelihood of tuberculosis.

Any person who has been exposed to tuberculosis, and this generally means anyone who has lived in a home where there has been an active case, should be regularly examined in order that the disease, if it does occur, may be detected in its earliest stages. Such a person should, of course, avoid those conditions which we have mentioned as being likely to predispose to the development of the disease by lowering resistance.

The person who, for any reason, suspects that he may have tuberculosis should seek an examination without delay. If there is nothing wrong, then the mind is set at rest; if disease is present, the sooner this is known, the better. Early diagnosis is the key which unlocks the door and admits the hope of cure.
